

Spring 2026 Newsletter

Dear Members and Colleagues,

As I conclude my term as President of the Palm Beach County Chapter, I have had the opportunity to reflect on a year centered on growth, collaboration, and building a stronger operational foundation for the chapter.

Over the past year, we worked to formalize processes, improve planning and communication practices, update governing documents, and create tools intended to better support future leadership and long-term continuity.

We also expanded professional development opportunities through additional CPE offerings, increased collaboration with other chapters and professional organizations, outreach to students and emerging professionals, and partnerships with organizations that support the advancement of our members.

This inaugural edition of the reimagined chapter's newsletter is part of that broader effort - to improve communication, recognize member accomplishments, and keep our community connected and informed.

This year included many meaningful initiatives, including Audit Adventures 2.0, the CAE Roundtable, the FAU Career Fair, and other student outreach activities, and new chapter partnerships. These initiatives reflected a continued effort to strengthen the chapter's operations, programming, and member engagement.

I look forward to seeing the chapter continue to grow and thrive.

Member Spotlight

Carol Yerian, CIA, MACC

Carol is a Business Performance Manager for CEMEX USA, bringing over a decade of accounting and auditing experience to an area of quickly evolving reporting and audit requirements. She is passionate about process improvement, teaching, and helping others grow in their careers.

Q: What inspired you to pursue a career in internal audit?

A: Like many auditors, I started my career in accounting, but I was always drawn to understanding how the numbers ended up arriving at me. I also pursued extracurricular courses in operations management and thrived in those courses — audit seemed like a natural path for both my skills and interests.

Q: How do you explain to friends and family what internal audit is?

A: It is challenging to avoid the stereotypical “business police.” I prefer to explain (and work) in an advisory capacity—that internal audit provides an outsider’s point of view to the business, with in-depth insight and context of the company’s methods, goals, etc., that external auditors can rarely provide. Nothing against external auditors—they are incredible, juggling so many clients and industries!

Q: What is one skill that has helped you most in your career?

A: Persuasion. The most important component of persuasion is listening. If you can work to bring comfort to your stakeholder, be open to new knowledge, and truly take in what they share with you, then you have the best baseline to persuade them toward your recommended action. If our stakeholders never apply any part of our recommendations, then what was the point of the audit?

Q: What has been one of your most rewarding professional experiences?

A: I was once directed to inspect a portion of the business and become an expert, as none of my team members at the time had extensive knowledge of it. I was given the opportunity to dive in, connect, and collaborate with so many wonderful colleagues in my company at all levels—from janitorial staff to senior executives. Several months later, not only had I learned a major component of the company, but I was also able to build professional trust with many colleagues that, even six years later, I can still reach out to with questions or requests.

Q: What do you enjoy most about being a member of the The Institute of Internal Auditors?

A: I appreciate the opportunity to teach others about the endless opportunities in internal audit. Like many accounting graduates, you end up believing there are only three paths—tax, external audit, or business accounting. Had I understood the possibilities of internal audit earlier in my career, I'd likely have more years of it under my belt. I also enjoy organizing events and exercising professional muscles that rarely get to flex in a corporate auditing environment. Furthermore, you gain professional friendships.

Q: What is one goal you are currently working toward (professional or personal)?

A: Currently, I am in a period of my career where I am focusing on learning and expanding my knowledge and skills. I'm choosing to push through extra challenges that will ultimately expand my capabilities.

Personally, I have a long-term goal of sharing my skills to support educational programs focused on the arts. I was a double major in accounting and theatre in undergrad, with a goal of becoming a producer—I'd like to satisfy that dream while also helping build the dreams and skills of the next generation of artists and performers.

Q: Outside of work, what is something you enjoy doing?

A: Typically, I've been spending time with my toddler in recent years. In my limited free time, I enjoy playing tabletop games, brewery-hopping, going to restaurants, cooking, camping, hiking, and traveling. I routinely volunteer at the American German Club of the Palm Beaches, so you will find me there often serving drinks, keeping score at competitions (the perfect job for an auditor), and supporting their events in various roles. I am also quite crafty (painting, sewing, etc.) and enjoy any opportunity to be creative.

Q: What advice would you give to someone new to the profession?

A: Do scary things. When I was offered my first audit role, I was terrified when I accepted. It wasn't the first, nor the last time I would feel uncomfortable in my professional endeavors—but every time, I have come out the other side with new knowledge and confidence you can't get from a textbook. Just remember, when you are presented with something you think you may fail at, failure has incredible value. If failure is the worst-case scenario, then it is still worth pursuing rather than staying comfortable.
